

SYNOPSIS

Morning: Sophia Richman, Ph.D.

The Pathologizing Tilt in Holocaust Trauma Theorizing

This presentation challenges sweeping generalizations about survivors and identifies theoretical assumptions which have led to the pathologizing tilt in our trauma literature. It offers a more balanced view of Holocaust survivors which includes resilience and coping mechanisms like “healthy” dissociation and doubling as well as the use of artistic self-expression to work through traumatic experience. Case examples from literature and art illustrate the mending potential inherent in the creative process.

Afternoon: Spyros D. Orfanos, Ph.D

The Creative Pulse and the Great Wound

The narrative of creativity and imagination throughout the history of psychoanalysis has involved acts of engagement and renunciation. The celebration of the uniquely creative individual is a modern phenomenon emerging in the eighteenth century. This has yielded to contemporary claims for the genius in us all. Drawing on the today’s relational views and deep contextualism, this multimedia presentation will examine two artists (the composer Mikis Theodorakis and the vocalist Lina Orfanos) whose lives have been marked by trauma. The focus will be on how they have fashioned their own vitality in uplifting service to artistic and activist pursuits.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Morning Program

1. To recognize prevailing pathologizing generalizations about survivors of massive psychic trauma and the faulty assumptions they are based on.
2. To develop a more balanced view of survivors by identifying coping strategies and healing potential in the aftermath of catastrophic trauma.
3. To understand how artistic self-expression can facilitate mourning, witnessing, and healing.

Afternoon Program:

1. To identify creativity as an area of study in psychoanalysis and the history of ideas.
2. To compare and contrast psychoanalytic theories about creativity including contemporary relational ideas.
3. To demonstrate the concepts of dissociation and witnessing as experienced by two artists who have been subjected to trauma.
